The harvest season is an important time to the people in many Asian countries. People work very hard during the harvest season and believe that the moon has positive influences over the earth at this time. At the end of the harvest season on the 15th day of the 8th lunar month, when the full moon shines brightest, many countries celebrate with family and friends and say 'thank you' to the moon. Their celebrations include eating moon cakes, admiring the beauty of the moon, having lantern parades and children parading the streets dancing. In Japan they call it otsukimi and in China, Hong Kong, Malaysia, Vietnam and Singapore it's the Mid-Autumn Festival.
